Ransom & Randolph Celebrates Opening of New Conference and Training Center

Maumee, Ohio – July 28, 2026 - Ransom & Randolph (R&R), a global leader in investment casting in dental, jewelry, and industrial industries, recently celebrated the opening of its new Conference Room & Training Center at the company's global headquarters in Maumee, Ohio.

The new space was officially recognized with a ribbon-cutting ceremony on July 28, bringing together R&R employees, global sales team members, customers, and industry partners.

Designed as a dedicated space for education, technical training, collaboration and customer engagement, the new space expands R&R's ability to provide customers with immersive, hands-on learning experiences for continued education.

Located alongside R&R's working foundry and digital laboratory, the training center gives customers the opportunity to move beyond classroom instruction and see processes in action. With the ability to cast in-house, R&R can provide practical training that connects material selection, investing, burnout, casting and other critical process steps with real-world application.

R&R's digital lab further enhances these educational opportunities by allowing customers to explore evolving technologies and workflows, including digital design, and 3D printing.

"The new training center was created to be more than a meeting space," said Daniel Nixon, President and CEO of Ransom & Randolph. "It gives us the ability to combine education with hands-on experience. Customers can learn in the training center, step into our foundry to see casting firsthand and explore digital workflows in our lab. That combination allows our technical team to provide a level of practical training and support that is difficult to replicate in a traditional classroom setting."

The ribbon-cutting coincided with R&R's Global Sales Meeting, which brought members of the company's team together from around the world for several days of training, strategic discussion and collaboration. The new center provided a central setting for those conversations and offered an early look at how the space will be used moving forward.

The space is part of a larger approximately 2,200-square-foot expansion and renovation of R&R's global headquarters and further supports the company's commitment to providing employees and customers with resources for continued learning and development.

The facility will support customer and distributor training, technical workshops, product demonstrations, internal development programs and collaborative sessions with R&R teams from around the world. By bringing education, in-house casting capabilities and digital technology together in one location, R&R is creating an environment where customers can better understand the complete investment casting process, troubleshoot challenges and work directly with R&R's technical experts.

"For more than 150 years, Ransom & Randolph has continued to evolve alongside the industries we serve," Nixon added. "Our new training center builds on that legacy by giving us another way to share our expertise, work alongside our customers and provide the hands-on education and support they need today while preparing together for the future advancements of the industry."
